EXPERIENCE, EXPLORE, ENJOY

Upon Ludwig Leichhardt's exploration through Southern Queensland in 1844 there was an area abundant in Dogwood shrubs, which he named Dogwood Crossing. Following Leichhardt's expedition land settlement quickly followed. In 1878, an important turning point occurred in the development of the area as the railway came through. These changes spurred on the renaming of the localities in the area to Miles, in honour of William Miles, who at the time was a state Minister for Public Works and local landholder.

The population of Miles continued to grow and with the 1905 Land Settlement Scheme, many social and economical changes occurred across the district. In 1911 The Miles Butter Factory opened and there was a larger demand for dairy farming, more so than running sheep, which was originally the largest agricultural industry in the area. Industries such as timber, dairy, grazing and farming became the backbone of Miles and District.

In 1903 the Queensland State Government passed an election for the first Murilla Shire Council. This included the Miles, Condamine, Drillham and Dulacca areas. Prior to this the area had been administered by a Divisional Board with most meetings being held in Condamine. The first Murilla Shire Chambers were located on Marian Street in Miles until 1928 when the building was moved by a bullock dray to Murilla Street (formally Train Street) next to the town hall. The current local Council Customer Service Centre stands in that same place, now under the Western Downs Regional Council banner. During the various council amalgamations throughout Queensland in 2008 the Murilla Shire was combined with the Dalby, Chinchilla, Tara, Taroom and Wambo Shires. Initially this new shire was known as the Dalby Regional Council until 2009 when it was renamed the Western Downs Regional Council.
